INTRODUCTION.

THE Faculty of Speech, which makes so considerable a Difference between a Man and a Brute, is of excellent Use, as it renders Mankind conversible one with another, and as the various Natural Endowments, Observations, Experiences, and Attainments of every individual Man, are hereby, with a wonderful Facility, mutually communicated. And we may add to this the Invention of Letters, by means of which we are not confin'd within the narrow Limits of our Acquaintance and Contemporaries, but one Man may be acquainted with the Attainments of Multitudes of the wisest Men in Present and Ancient Times, either in his own or remote Countries. Words are those Channels, by which the Knowledge of Things is convey'd to our Understandings: And therefore upon a right Apprehension of them depends the Rectitude of our Notions; and in order to form our Judgments right, they must be understood in their proper Meaning, and us'd in their true Sense, either in Writing or Speaking. For if the Words of the Speaker or Writer, tho' ever so apposite to the Matter, be taken in a wrong Sense, they form erroneous Ideas in the Mind concerning the Thing spoken or written of; and if we use Words in a false and improper Sense, this causes Confusion in the Understanding of the Hearer, and renders the Discourse unintelligible.

It ought, therefore, to be the special Care and Study of every one, who would have his Mind furnished with the useful Knowledge of Things of any Kind, to get a true and distinct Idea of the proper Sense and Meaning of Words, and Terms of Art, in which they are express'd, without which no good Progress can be made.

It has therefore been the universal Practice of all polite Nations, to make the Study of Letters the first Business of Life. And because this Accomplishment is necessary to all Persons, and but

INTRODUCTION.

but few, comparatively speaking, have the Advantage of a learned Education to any considerable Proficiency, Dictionaries have in all Languages been compiled, to which, as to Store-Houses, such Persons may have Recourse, as often as any thing occurs in Conversation or Reading, with which they are unacquainted, or when they themselves would speak or write Properly and Intelligibly.

And as such Helps have been thought useful in all civilized Nations, they appear more eminently necessary in the English Tongue, not only because it is, perhaps, the most copious Language of any in Europe, but is likewise made up of so great a Variety of other Languages, both Ancient and Modern, as will plainly appear to any one who shall peruse the following Dictionary. Of the Reason of which Mixture, and by what Accidents it was brought about, I shall give the following Account.

That Languages are liable to Changes and Alterations (besides that ancient Confusion of Tongues at the Building the Tower of Babel) there have been too many Instances to require any Proof. The Causes of Change in Languages are, in general, Three:

First, Commigrations or Conquests of Nations, by which in Tract of Time there succeeds a Coalition of the Languages of the Conquerors with the Conquered. So the Italian Language sprang from the Latin, being mixed with German-Gothic: The Spanish from Latin, mixed with Gothic-German, Arabic, or Morisco: The French from the Latin, German, and ancient Gaulish or Gallic.

Secondly, From Commerce, by which Offices, Dignities, the Names of Wares, and Terms of Traffick are introduced, which we commonly take with the Wares from the Persons of whom we have them, and new form them according to the Genius of our own Tongue.

Thirdly, From the Esteem and valuable Properties of any particular Language, by which we endeavour to imitate this or that Tongue, as the more Learned, Elegant, Copious, or Expressive. So learned Men all over Europe esteem the Latin and Greek Tongues, as the Treasuries of all Science; Christian Divines reverence the Hebrew and Greek; the Turks and Mahometans the Arabic, as the Mistresses of Religion; the Dutch, Germans, and English, the French, for its Softness and Smoothness of Expression; the Danes and Swedes the Teutonic, as more Copious.

INTRODUCTION.

If a Tongue be once esteem'd as more learned, from thence the Learned commonly borrow Technical Words, or Words of Art; as in Physick, Philosophy, Mathematicks, and others from the Greek. If it be esteem'd more elegant or fine in Pronunciation, then Courtiers, who are apt to dislike any thing that is common, and the Product of their own Country, and to delight in what is Foreign, borrow a great many Words of Complaisance and Addrefs.

Now that from these three Causes in general, the ancient Language of Britain is changed from what it originally was, and come to be what now it is, will plainly appear from these Considerations:

First, The ancient Language of Britain is generally allow'd to have been the same with the Gaulic or French, (this Island in probability having been first peopled from Gallia) as both Cæsar and Tacitus affirm, and prove, by many strong and conclusive Arguments, as by their Religion, Manners, Customs, and the Nearness of their Situation. But now we have very small Remains of the ancient British Tongue left in England, except in Wales and Cornwall; which will not appear strange, when what follows is considered.

Julius Cæsar some Time before the Birth of our Saviour, in the Time of King Cassivelaune, made a Descent upon England, tho' he rather discover'd it than made a Conquest of it; but about the Year of Christ 45, in the Time of Claudius, Aulus Plautius was sent over with some Roman Forces, by whom, and P. Ostorius Scapula, Codigunus and Caractacus, two Kings of the Britons, were severally overcome in Battle. A Roman Colony was planted at Maldon in Essex, and the Southern Parts thereof reduced to the Form of a Roman Province; and after that the Whole was conquered, as far as to the Friths of Dunbarton and Edinburgh, by Agricola in the Time of Domitian; and the Remains of the unconquered Britons retired to the West Part, call'd Wales, carrying their Language with them over the Mountains, where they have preserved it to this Day.

Britain being thus become a Roman Province, tho' still suffered to be governed by Kings of its own, as Vice-Roys under the Roman Emperours, the Roman Legions residing in Britain, for the Space of above two hundred Years, undoubtedly disseminated the Latin Tongue; and the People, being also governed by Laws written in Latin, must necessarily make a Mixture of Languages. This seems to have been the first Mutation the Language of Britain suffered: However, so tenacious were our Forefathers of their native Language, that it over-grew the Roman.

Thus

INTRODUCTION.

Thus the British Tongue continued for some Time mix'd with Provincial Latin, till the Roman Legions being called home, upon account of intestine Troubles, about the Year 433, the Scots and Picts, taking the Advantage of their Absence, harass'd the Northern Parts of Britain; against whom King Vortigern, about the Year 440, call'd in the Assistance of the Saxons, a Great and Potent Nation among the Germans, in the Dukedom of Holstein, but greater by the Aggregation of many People under their Name and Service, as the Jutes from Jutland, and the Angles from Sleswick: who coming hither under the Conduct of Hengist and Horfa, having overcome the Picts and Scots in a pitch'd Battle near Stamford in Lincolnshire, were afterwards rewarded for this Victory with the Isle of Thanet, and after that with the whole County of Kent, where they governed for about 350 Years, under the Titles of Earls of Kent; but they, growing powerful, began afterwards to quarrel with their Landlords, whom, by degrees, they dispossess'd of all the Country on this Side the Severn, parcelling it out into seven Kingdoms, call'd the Saxon Heptarchy, destroying the British Tongue then mix'd with the Provincial Latin, together with the Inhabitants, by a long and destructive War, the Remains of them being again oblig'd to retire with the British Tongue over the Mountains of Wales.

So the British Language being in a manner quite extinct in all other Parts of Britain, the Saxon Language became the Language of the Country, and so continued till near the Year 800, when the Danes infested England, and made Settlements in the North and East Parts of Britain, and at length in about 200 Years arriv'd at the sole Government of it; but their Government, lasting only about 26 Years, made not so considerable a Change in the English Saxon, as the next Revolution. Then about the Year 1067, William Duke of Normandy, commonly call'd William the Conqueror, came over to Britain; and, having vanquished Harold the Danish King, made an intire Conquest of Britain: And as a Monument of their Conquest, the Normans endeavoured to yoke the English under their Tongue, as they had under their Command, by compelling them to teach their Children in their Schools nothing but the French, by publishing their Laws in French, and by enforcing them most rigorously to plead and be impleaded in that Tongue, for the Space of about 350 Years; by which means the Language of Britain became a Dialect of the English Saxon and Norman French, which now are the Ground-work or Fundamentals of the present Language of Great Britain.

Having

INTRODUCTION.

Having thus shewn how the ancient British Language was in a manner extirpated by the Romans, Danes, and Saxons, and succeeded by the Saxon, and after that the Saxon blended with the Norman French; before I proceed to account for the Alteration of the English Saxon, by the two other Causes, I shall mention something relating to the Saxon Tongue, of a great Part of which the Normans despoil'd us, giving a worse for a better. "Great verily" (says Camden) was the Glory of our Tongue before the Norman Conquest, in this, that the Old English could express most aptly "all the Conceptions of the Mind in their own Tongue, without borrowing from any," and of this gives the following Examples.

The Service of God called Religion, they call'd Ean-ƿaƿtney, as the only Assurance and fast Anchor hold of our Souls Health.

The Gladsome Tidings of Salvation, which the Greeks call Ευαγγέλιον, they call'd Godey-ƿpel, i. e. God's Speech.

Our Saviour, in French Sauveur, of Salvator, Lat. they called Al-hael, i. e. All Health, Pharisees, Sundep-halƿgens, i. e. Religious Men, which had sundred and separated themselves from the Men of the World.

The Scribes, Boc Men, i. e. Book-men.

The Sacrament, Haliƿdom, i. e. Holy Judgment.

Fertility, Eomƿdey-Wele, i. e. the Wealth of the Earth.

The Judgment, Dome-ƿettele, i. e. the Settling of Doom.

A Parliament, Witƿten-mot, i. e. an Assembly of Wise Men.

Conscience, Inƿit, i. e. that which they did inwardly wot or know certainly.

Also the Names they gave to their Months were significant, as,

JANUARY [Wulƿe Monaƿ, Sax. i. e. Wolf-month] because in that Month the Wolves were most mischievous to them, for that thro' the Extremity of Cold and Snow, they could not find Beasts sufficient to satisfy their ravenous Appetites.

FEBRUARY [Spƿnouƿ Kele, Sax. i. e. Colewort or Wort-Spring] because then Worts begin to sprout.

MARCH [Lencƿ Monaƿ, Sax. i. e. the Lengthening Month] because then the Days begin in Length to exceed the Nights.

APRIL [Ooyƿteƿ Monaƿ, Sax.] because their Easter generally fell in April.

MAY [ƿri-milci, Sax. i. e. 3 Milkings] because then they milk'd their Cattle three Times a Day.

JUNE [Mede Monaƿ, Sax. i. e. Meadow Month] because then their Cattle were turned out to feed in the Meadows.

JULY [Heƿ Monaƿ, Sax. i. e. Hay Month] because then they generally cut their Hay.

AUGUST [Aƿn Monaƿ, Sax. i. e. Barn Month] because they then filled their Barns.

SEPTEMBER [Leƿt Monaƿ, Sax. i. e. Grist-Month] because they carried their new Corn to the Mill.

OCTOBER [Wyn Monaƿ, Sax. i. e. Wine Month] because then Grapes were usually press'd to make Wines.

NOVEMBER [Wynƿe Monaƿ, Sax. i. e. Windy Month] because of the high Winds happening commonly in that Month.

DECEMBER [Wynƿteƿ Monaƿ, Sax. i. e. Winter-Month, because of the Cold then growing intense; and afterwards Haliƿ Monaƿ, Sax. i. e. Holy-Month] on Account of the Nativity of Christ.

INTRODUCTION.

I shall only add one Piece of Saxon Antiquity more, and so proceed, which is the Lord's Prayer in the Saxon Language, written about the Year of Christ 900, by Alfred Bishop of Durham.

Væn ƿæðer ðic arið in Heoƿnay ƿic gehalgud ðin noma
Our Father which art in Heavens be hallowed thine Name to cýmeð ðin ƿic ƿic ðin ƿilla ƿue iſ in Heoƿnay and come thy Kingdom be they Will so as in Heavens and in Eopðo. Væn half oƿen ƿiſðlic ƿel vſ to dæg and ƿonin Earth. Our Loaf ſupersubſtantial give us to Day and forgeſ vſ ƿcýða uſna ƿue ƿe ƿonſgean, ƿcýlðgum vſum and give us Debts our ſo we forgive Debts ours, and no inleað vſið in cýſtunng, Ah geſƿuð ƿiſch ƿnom iſle Amen.
do not lead us into Temptation, but deliver every one from Evil Amen.

By theſe Inſtances it does appear, that the English Saxon Language, of which the Normans deſpoiled us in great Part, had its Beauties, was ſignificant and emphatical, and preferable to what they impoſed upon us.

This may ſuffice for the Mutation of our Language upon the firſt Cauſe of it, which was Conqueſt: I now proceed to the other Two,

Secondly, As to Commerce, the Britains having been of a long Time a Trading Nation, as it generally happens, we have had many Words introduced by that Means; and beſides, Britain having been a conſiderable Time under Subjection to the See of Rome, in Eccleſiaſtical Affairs, the Italians coming over hither to manage the Pope's Concerns, and others for Church Dignities, and many Britains going hence to Rome on Account of Eccleſiaſtical Suits, Prieſthoods, Abbacies, and Biſhopricks, muſt unavoidably introduce ſome Italian Words among us.

Thirdly, As to the particular Properties of a Language, our Tongue has undergone no ſmall Mutation, or rather has received no ſmall Improvement upon that Account; for as to the Greek and Latin, the Learned have, together with the Arts and Sciences (now rendered very familiar among us) introduced abundance, nay almoſt all the Terms of Art in the Mathematicks, Philosophy, Phyſick, and Anatomy, with many others from them; and many more have we entertained from the Latin, French, &c. for the ſake of Neatneſs and Elegancy.

So that at this Day our Language, which 1800 Years ago was the ancient Britiſh or Welſh, is now a Mixture of Saxon, Teu- tonic,

INTRODUCTION.

tonic, Dutch, Danish, Norman, and Modern French, imbellish'd with the Greek and Latin.

Yet is not this, I think, any Disparagement to the English Tongue, as now spoke (for this Change is nothing but what all Languages have been liable to, and have undergone, and do interchangeably participate each with other, having likewise enfranchis'd many Words from the Latin and Greek, though perhaps not so many as we) but it rather makes to the Advantage of its Character, for by this transplanting Foreign Words into our Native Soil, and new forming them, we have enrich'd it, that now it is become the most Copious and Significant Language in Europe, if not in the World.

Thus Camden said of it in his Time, “ That though he would “ not say, the English Tongue was as sacred as the Hebrew, or
“ as learned as the Greek, yet that it was as fluent as the Latin,
“ as courteous as the Spanish, as courtlike as the French, and as “ amorous as the Italian; so that being beautified and enriched
“ out of other Tongues, partly by enfranchizing and indenizing
“ Foreign Words, partly by implanting new ones with artful Com“ position, our Tongue is as copious, pithy, and significative, as “ any other in Europe.

And Dr. Heylin says of it, “ That whereas the English Tongue “ is a Compound of Latin, French, Dutch, &c. it rather adds to “ its Perfection, than detracts any thing from its Worth, since out
“ of every Language we have culled the most significant Words,
“ and equally participate of what is excellent in them, their Im“ perfections being rejected. For it is neither so boisterous as the “ Dutch, nor so effeminate as the French, yet as significant as the “ Latin, and in the happy Conjunction of two or more Words in “ one, little inferiour to the Greek.

If then the English Tongue, in the Opinion of these learned Authors, deserved this Character in their Time, how much more now, having since received so considerable Improvements from so many celebrated Writers.

Having given this short Account, by what Steps and Gradations the English Tongue is arrived to be what it now is, I shall proceed to give abrief Account of the Method I have taken in the following Work.

It is not my Design to depreciate the Labours of those worthy Authors, whose Writings of this kind have saved me much Pains,
I shall

INTRODUCTION.

I shall only say, as facile est inventis addere, in perusing the best Books of this kind extant, I have found in them both a Redundancy and Deficiency, the former of which I have omitted to make room for the latter, having enriched it with several 1000 English Words and Phrases, in no English Dictionary before extant.

As for the Etymological Part, or those Words from Foreign Languages, whence the English Words were deriv'd, I think I am the first who has attempted it in English, except what Mr. Blunt has done in his Glossography, which is but a very small Part, and those of a Latin Derivation chiefly, besides a small Extract of Dr. Skinner's Etymologicon.

However, I shall not enlarge at present upon the Usefulness of that Part, supposing that such Persons who understand the Languages need no such Information; and as in them, which do not, the Etymological Part is separated so distinctly from the rest, being inclosed within Crotchets, that they may pass it over without any manner of Trouble or Inconvenience.

In order to the more easy apprehending the Method I have taken, I shall give the following Account:

1. In those Words of a Northern Derivation, I have generally given the Saxon Word first; from whence the English Word in all Probability was deriv'd, and afterwards the Teutonic, Danish, and Low-Dutch, where I have found them in the same or a cognate Signification.

2. In many Words, for which no Saxon Words are to be found, I have given the Teutonic, Low-Dutch, Danish, or others, where they are to be found of the same or a like Signification, though it is very probable they came to us immediately from the Saxon Tongue, but the Fewness of the Books we have now left in the Saxon Language does not furnish us with them, and in as much as it is certain, that the English Saxon is no other than a Dialect of the ancient Teutonic, it appears the more probable.

3. In Words derived from the Southern Languages, I have set down the French, and afterwards frequently the Italian and Spanish, if they have them in the same or a like Signification; and lastly the Latin, from which probably they were all derived.

4. In Terms of Art; as Anatomy, Chymistry, Logick, Mathematics, Philosophy, Physick, Surgery, and others, I have generally given given the French if they have them, then the Latin, and afterwards the Greek, from whence they generally proceeded.

3. In many Words of a Latin or Greek Original, not properly Terms of Art; I have likewise in the first Place set the French, afterwards the Latin and Greek, so far complying with those who are of Opinion, that we have them immediately, or in the first Place from the French; though I cannot intirely give into that Notion, for Reasons which will appear in some of the following Articles.

6. Thus much in the General, but more particularly, as for those Words which the French have very near in Spelling, and also the Latin, I have set down the French first, and after the Latin, from which they were derived.

7. In Nouns, especially those that end in ion, as Salvation, Generation, &c. which are evidently deriv'd from the Latin, to avoid the Swelling of the Book, by setting down the Latin and French Words, I have put F. of L. at the End of the Paragraph, which signifies the Words, Generation, Salvation, &c. are as well French as English literally, which come of the Latin, Salvatio, Generatio, &c. and differ only by the Addition of n at the End.

8. In other Nouns, where the English Word is pure Latin, and the French differs in Spelling, in some Letter or Letters, as Author, L. Auteur, F. I have set the French within a Crotchet, and L. at the End, which denotes the Word to be literally Latin.

9. In many Adjectives in ive, as conclusive, &c. which are not found in Latin Dictionaries, though they might be Analogically formed, as well as the Adverb conclusive, I have omitted to set L. at the End.

10. In Adjectives and Participles, I have omitted to set down the French, because it appears plain to me, they were rather deriv'd of the Latin, than the French, as Desolate, of Desolatus, L. rather than Desolè, F. This may suffice for the Rest.

11. As to Verbs, I have for the most Part set down the Latin Supines, as the Words from which the English are immediately deriv'd, rather than the Infinitive Moods, especially those of the third Conjugation in Latin, because nearer in the Spelling, as to collect, from Collectum, Supine, rather than Colligere, Infinitive, for the Reason before-mentioned.

INTRODUCTION.

I have not confined my self to derive from those Latin Words only, that may be found in Authors call'd Classick, or of the purest Ages of the Latin Tongue ; since it is evident we have derived from many Latin Words, which have been handed down to us by Writers of a later Date, School-men, Philosophers, Physicians, Mathematicians, and others.

If any of those Words given as the Etymon of the English Word should be thought too remote in Sense or Spelling, it may be sufficient to obviate such an Objection, that nothing is more common in the transplanting Words from one Language to another, than to make considerable Variations, as in the Word Knave from the Saxon Cnapa, which differs Litterally and in Sense too ; for it signified in Saxon Times no more than Servitour, but now generally is used to signify a dishonest Person. And as to the Spelling, the different Orthography of Nations has so disguised many Words of the same Pronunciation and Signification, that they appear so unlike, that such as are not acquainted with each Language, nor accustomed to Etymological Observations, can hardly discern their Affinity. And besides, very few of the Etymological Words are my own, but I have generally the Suffrage of Somner, Camden, Verstegan, Spelman, Casaubon, Dr. Th. Henshaw, Skinner, Junius, Menagius, Minsheu, and other great Names and approved Etymologists to bear me out.

To conclude, I have omitted nothing to render this Work as compleat as all the Helps I could come at, and other Circumstances would admit of. And, I hope, that considering the vast Variety both of Words and Things, as few Errors have escaped my Notice, as could reasonably be expected. If any dissent from me in any Particular, it ought to secure me from Censure, that I pretend only to propose to, and not impose upon their Judgment, and shall conclude with Horace,

Like Father like Son.

This Proverb does not only intimate the force of Nature, but also of Example; as much the strength of Imagination and Practice in the latter, as the violent Bent of Inclination in the former. 'Tis true, that Children, tho' not always, are generally like the Father or Mother, in their Minds as well as their Bodies; the Faculties of the former commonly run in a Blood; and as for the Features and Complexion of the latter, they often look as if they were cast in the same Mould: But I presume the Point of the Proverb, is chiefly directed at their Examples, and that such as are the Parents, as to Vice or Virtue, such are too commonly the Children; that the ill Examples of a vicious Father almost universally tend to the debauching a Son, when the good Precepts and Examples of a virtuous Father go a great Way to the forming a virtuous one. Mali corvi, Malum ovum, say the Latins; and, Οὐδέποτε ἐκ σκίλλης ῥόδον φύεται, say the Greeks.

Every Man thinks his own Geese Swans.

This Proverb intimates that an inbred Philauty runs through the whole Race of Flesh and Blood, and that Self-love is the Mother of Vanity, Pride, and Mistake. It turns a Man's Geese into Swans, his Dunghill Poultry into Pheasants, and his Lambs into Venison. It blinds the Understanding, perverts the Judgment, depraves the Reason of the otherwise most modest Distinguishers of Truth and Falshy. It makes a Man so fondly conceited of himself, that he prefers his own Art for its Excellency, his own Skill for its Perfection, his own Compositions for their Wit, and his own Productions for their Beauty. It makes even his Vices seem to him Virtues, and his Deformities Beauties; for so every Crow thinks her own Bird fairest, though never so black and ugly. Suum cuique Pulchrum, say the Latins.
